A written public comment was received by Sue Klein and read into the record:

RE: Sanitation Contract Meeting / FQMD Sanitation Committee Meeting

I am a French Quarter resident, FQMD Commissioner, and I am not being paid in connection with my comments and requests regarding the sanitation proposals to be reviewed on July 21, 2025 by the Sanitation Committee. The level of service currently being provided should be the French Quarter's standard sought for any new contract, emergency or regular. Specifically, the current lighter gross vehicular weight and shorter axel length of the collection trucks, the heated, pressurized washings, the same concentration and brand of deodorizer, the public sidewalk stationary bin collections, and the between-collection garbage inspections & removal should be required. There are probably other aspects of the current service of which I am unaware. It's not time to reverse course and dumb down these crucial services in our historic and revenue producing district. Thank you for your consideration of this matter. Sincerely, Susan S. Klein

3. Discussion –

a. Review of Sanitation Proposals

See attached documents. French Quarter Management District (FQMD) Board Chair Jane Cooper reported that a Request for Proposals (RFP) was launched by the FQMD on July 7th regarding emergency sanitation services in the French Quarter. She noted that this process of getting sanitation services effective by August 1st has been supported by a large and diverse group, including State legislature, a majority of City Councilmembers, as well as French Quarter businesses and residents. Ms. Cooper stated that the FQMD received one proposal by the deadline, which was submitted by IV Waste. She thanked FQMD legal counsel, Sharonda Williams, for her attendance as well as her guidance through the RFP process. Christian Pendleton asked Ms. Williams if she had any questions regarding the FQMD conducting the RFP and issuing the contract. Ms. Williams answered no, stating that the FQMD has been specifically allowed to proceed with authority to conduct the RFP process. Mr. Pendleton asked if, because only one bid was submitted, it was still necessary to score the bid. Ms. Williams replied yes. Ms. Cooper announced that after today's meeting, the full Board of Commissioners will meet on Monday, July 28th, to review and discuss the proposal. She noted that the proposal will be available to the public on the FQMD's website following Monday's Board meeting. She encouraged the meeting guests to ask any questions they may have, adding that she will be meeting with IV Waste tomorrow to discuss any unanswered questions that need further clarification.

Mr. Pendleton asked Ms. Cooper if proper public notice was given by the FQMD for the vendor and the public. Ms. Cooper answered yes, stating that the FQMD followed all the proper protocol for public notice. Mamie Gasperecz asked if Ms. Cooper could get clarification from IV Waste on if residents should report their sanitation issues through the 311 system, and if clarification will be provided as to how IV Waste is receiving requests for services, and when these requests are completed. She noted that the FQMD Livability Committee has tracked sanitation Key Performance Indices in the past, including the vehicle speed to ensure that all sanitation vehicles are complying with the law. Ms. Cooper stated that the emergency sanitation contract will be effective on August 1st, 2025 once it has been negotiated and signed, but noted that the termination date will need clarification. She added that the current sanitation agreement with IV Waste will be terminated on July 30th, but IV Waste will continue to provide services on July 31st before the emergency contract goes into effect.

Ms. Cooper asked the Sanitation Contract Screening Committee to take a moment to individually score the IV Waste proposal. Ms. Williams suggested that the Committee score the proposal, but to hold on scoring the pay proposal, which the FQMD will have the ability to negotiate. Each proposal score will be attached at the end of today's meeting notes. Out of 75 points possible, the Committee members scored for total endorsement of the proposal.

b. Motion: Consider a motion to recommend to the Board of Commissioners contracting with a sanitation vendor for the French Quarter, subject to final negotiations.

Mr. Pendleton made a motion to recommend to the Board of Commissioners contracting with IV Waste for sanitation services for the French Quarter, subject to final negotiations. Christine Bondio seconded the motion, and it was approved.

Mr. Pendleton made a motion to recommend to the Board of Commissioners negotiation with IV Waste's pay proposal for sanitation services in the French Quarter. Ms. Bondio seconded the motion, and it was approved.

4. New Business

No new business was discussed.

5. Adjournment

Mr. Pendleton made a motion to adjourn. Ms. Gasperecz seconded the motion, and the meeting adjourned at 9:45 AM.

This long-gone experience was provided to the City of New Orleans and the French Quarter, by SDT Waste and Debris Services, a company founded and previously owned by Mr. Sidney Torres who now owns and operates IV Waste, LLC.

For this outstanding service provided by SDT Waste & Debris Services, Mr. Torres was given the key to the city and received ample recognition from both the Mayor and the New Orleans City Council. SDT Waste and Debris Services also earned national press recognition for cleaning the French Quarter. Additionally, Mr. Torres had a Chemist customize and develop a Lemon Fresh deodorizer to use in the French Quarter. Residents and visitors still remember to this day the “Lemony Fresh Smell” and “Disney Like Clean” Mr. Torres’ company brought to the French Quarter. The Wall Street Journal as well as CNBC contained articles detailing how clean SDT had made the French Quarter. Which in turn helped in promoting the City of New Orleans.

Mr. Torres and IV Waste brought the French Quarter back to its former glory, with new and improved ideas, a dedicated team and the strong commitment to the great quality of service characteristic of IV Waste and all its team members. The Company believes that the IV Waste mentality “Give your Best; Do your Best; Be the Best”; is the way to bring the French Quarter area to the next level. A place that will not only put the French Quarter back on the Global Map, but also serve as a platform to promote the City of New Orleans on a broad scale. IV Waste has accomplished this since taking over the New Orleans Area 5 contract, as evidenced by the success of the Superbowl that took place at the New Orleans Caesar’s Superdome on February 9, 2025 with an IV Waste Chemist customized Lemon Fresh deodorizer and fresh smelling French Quarter.

IV Waste understands the complexity of various waste streams and has qualified staff to access, develop, and implement a plan for responsible, safe, and efficient mitigation.

In July of 2021, IV Waste was there to assist Metro Services in residential curbside service when the city was in need of assistance with the garbage removal services. In October of 2021, the City of New Orleans awarded IV Waste an emergency contract to help clean the City post Hurricane Ida.

On January 1, 2025, IV Waste immediately went to work to help the Federal, State, and local agencies when Bourbon Street was the site of a mass casualty terror event. In order to help reduce the impact to French Quarter businesses, IV Waste worked tirelessly to help clean-up as expeditiously as possible given the horrific aftermath.

IV Waste played an integral role in the cleanup of the snowstorm that occurred in January of 2025. IV Waste provided much need equipment and manpower to get the City of New Orleans back on its feet with our usual innovative approach when dealing with difficult situations. We transformed our cleaning equipment into snow removal equipment, and by providing this specialized equipment and manpower, IV Waste enabled businesses to open faster than expected.

IV Waste possesses a strong business model that has allowed the company to develop a competitive advantage in the industry, which has allowed the company to achieve long-term sustainable growth while still offering a premium quality service. Throughout its existence, IV Waste has always ensured to provide timely garbage pickups and never leaves customers without a service. The company possesses a successful proven track record of asset management which provides IV Waste with enough excess capacity to increase operational needs in short periods of time.

IV Waste successfully serves other governmental contracts in St Bernard Parish, the City of Harahan, and the City of New Orleans. The company is the current service provider for the City of New Orleans Service Areas 1, 2, and 5, and has also assisted with the emergency Service Contracts for the City of New Orleans.

IV Waste's top management team has over 60 years of combined work experience in the waste management business. The company owner and founder Sidney D. Torres, IV started his first garbage collection company SDT Waste & Debris Services, LLC in 2006 which was later sold in 2011. IV Waste's President, Sidney D. Torres, IV, offers the best possible service to the City of New Orleans French Quarter, by providing new equipment and state-of-the-art technology for enhanced productivity. IV Waste is always looking for new and innovative ways to improve waste collection. The Company currently has a fleet of 100 vehicles, including Roll-Off, Frontload, and Rear Load garbage trucks that serve communities in the New Orleans metropolitan area. The company also has a fleet of over 10,000 containers which include roll-off, front load, and rear loader.

IV Waste has proven to be more efficient than its competitors. We utilize environmentally safe procedures and are proactive in addressing issues regarding solid waste and debris collection and related cleaning services. IV Waste is proud to provide immediate responses through the Quarter Clean email program that is monitored by the FQMD.

IV Waste also has in place a Fleet Safety Program to promote and ensure consistent guidelines for the safe and proper operation of its fleet and the safety of its employees and the public. This program has resulted in reducing injuries, saving lives, and improving efficiency in operations.

IV Waste's Fleet Safety Program includes the following guidelines to ensure consistency within IV Waste and allow for better management of personnel and accountability:

- Driver Qualification - each employee has completed a Driving Record Report which has been verified by obtaining a driving record abstract from the state Motor Vehicle Department.
- Vehicle and equipment maintenance – in the event of an accident, IV Waste vehicles are spec'd with reasonable safety features including rear window defogger/wipers, passenger side rear view mirrors, air bags, anti-lock brakes, etc. Each vehicle will be maintained according to the vehicle's owner's manual; all maintenance and repairs will be recorded and retained on file. A manager inspects each employee's vehicle daily and each delivery vehicle will be inspected annually along with an Annual Driver Automobile Self-Inspection Report.
- Accident reporting and investigation - all accidents will be immediately reported, and an IV Waste supervisor will investigate each scene personally. Each accident will be evaluated within seven days to determine cause and preventability, utilizing the "Guide for Determining Preventability."
- Driver supervision and training - Annual motor vehicle department reports will be run on each employee assigned to a company vehicle. Fleet safety is rewarded through a compensation bonus program. Employees who incur two moving violations and/or at-fault accidents in 12 months are required to attend a state approved defensive driving course. If employees incur three moving violations and/or at-fault accidents in one year, they will lose their driving privileges until such time as management deems appropriate. A follow-up state approved defensive driving course will be mandatory.
- IV Waste uses iMobile along with 3rd Eye Camera system to manage the fleet of trucks. iMobile is an app-based platform on iPads mounted in each truck providing drivers real-time access for routes and other customer data. “Accountability and transparency system is available for all our customers through our technology and GPS tracking ready on each truck. Every customer will have a unique geocode that allows us to know exactly when the truck makes the pickup or when the truck will be at the location. We pride ourselves on using technology to make us accountable for delivering the highest level of service.”-Sidney D. Torres, IV.

A National Safety Council study determined that companies without a formal fleet safety program average over three times the accidents per vehicle annually compared to companies with a formal program. Upon hire, each employee of IV Waste is required to sign off on the Fleet Safety Program.

To ensure safety and meet operational standards, IV Waste’s fleet is inspected daily by the company’s team of dedicated mechanics. Mechanical issues are addressed immediately to provide optimal operation of all company assets.

IV Waste knows that this is a contract that requires 365 days a year service. This kind of service intensive contract will add additional wear and tear on some of the equipment. For that reason, through the duration of the contract, the Company is planning on replacing “some” of the equipment with newer equipment once this equipment has reached its useful life. The cost associated with the replacement of this equipment is already included in the price proposal.

In addition to the minimum equipment requirements stipulated in RFP No FQMDESS-1, IV Waste is planning on having additional resources to have backup equipment available in case of any additional needs.

We understand the scope of work described in the RFP. We are willing to provide those services and enter into a contract with the French Quarter Management District. Our service will include all labor, equipment, and materials necessary to perform all sanitation services as required by the FQMD for the French Quarter and additional services as directed by the FQMD.

Confirmation

IV Waste owns all the equipment and employs all labor that will be used to fulfill the needs of the emergency RFP put forth by the FQMD. Sub-contractors in the form of laborers will only be used to fulfill the needs of the DBE stipulation outlined in the emergency RFP.

Violent crime fell 45% in the months that followed, as described in the news story on NBC nightly news.

Re: Letter of Recommendation

To Whom It May Concern,

Please let this serve as a letter of recommendation for the high quality services of IV Waste, LLC of New Orleans. For the past three years, St. Bernard Parish Government (SBPG) has worked hand in hand with the IV Waste team through various challenges such as hurricanes, a tornado, and COVID-19. Through these events as well as normal operations, we continue to experience excellent service. They have proven to be a reliable partner with an understanding of our mission "to protect and enhance the quality of life by providing a high level of service in an efficient and responsive manner for all citizens."

IV Waste came on board by way of a competitive request for proposal during a time in which residential garbage collection was becoming an issue in our community. Though just getting back into the residential waste market at the time, IV Waste owner Sidney Torres IV and his team immediately brought stability and an excitement to residential waste collection in the parish due to past experience in the business. IV Waste has delivered on all of their contractual agreements as well as verbal commitments that were made to assist SBPG in delivering the highest quality service to our residents. Most importantly, complaint calls concerning residential waste became virtually nonexistent. This allowed our SBPG Council and Administration to focus on more pressing needs in our community.

I would strongly consider making IV Waste, LLC a vendor for your residential waste collection. Their technology, cleanliness, professionalism, marketing capabilities and responsiveness are second to none. We've had great experiences with them for the services rendered to St. Bernard. If you have any question please feel free to reach out.

Sincerely,

Ronald J. Alonzo, Jr.

Re: Letter of Recommendation

IV Waste was awarded the solid waste and recyclable materials collection contract for Area 2 in 2022. IV Waste has provided exceptional service to over 50,000 service locations with minimal missed collection complaints. IV Waste effectively utilizes GPS and fleet management technology to optimize collections across the service area.

Based on their stellar performance in Area 2, IV Waste was recently awarded the solid waste and recyclable materials collection contract for Area 1 (64,404 service locations) with a targeted April 1, 2024 transition date.

On numerous occasions since 2021, IV Waste has made resources and equipment available to the City of New Orleans to support emergency collections and supplement faltering service providers. The City of New Orleans is grateful to IV Waste for their consistent and enduring support.

I recommend IV Waste for solid waste and recycling services in the City of Harahan.

Please feel free to contact me if you have any questions.

Re: IV Waste, L.L.C.'s Response to Tab 12: Litigation and Judgments

Dear Madam or Sir:

Our firm is counsel for IV Waste, LLC in certain litigation pending against IV Waste in Orleans and Jefferson Parish. I am providing a summary of those actions and a contempt judgment that was issued against IV Waste in the Orleans Parish litigation but is being appealed.

Orleans:

On May 4, 2020, a civil action was filed against IV Waste in the Civil District Court for the Parish of Orleans captioned: Ramelli Janitorial Service, Inc. v. IV Waste, LLC, No. 2020-3606, Division "J" (the "Orleans Lawsuit"). The Lawsuit was filed by Ramelli Janitorial Service, Inc. ("Ramelli"), a business competitor of IV Waste, seeking injunctive relief and damages. IV Waste has countersued for damages.

The Orleans Lawsuit arises out of the City of Kenner's approving a contract with IV Waste for garbage and recycling collection and disposal in 2020. Ramelli had been providing those services pursuant to a contract it had entered with the City of Kenner in 2016. Ramelli alleges in the lawsuit that IV Waste had obtained its contract through unfair trade practices and obtained a temporary restraining order prohibiting IV Waste from emptying or handling any Ramelli owned garbage containers in the performance of its work in Kenner, which restraining order has expired. IV Waste vehemently contests Ramelli's allegations and adamantly denies engaging in any wrongful conduct. IV Waste has countersued Ramelli for unfair trade practices it contends were designed to interfere with IV Waste's performance of work in the City of Kenner and harm its business reputation.

During the litigation, disputes over the scope and manner of discovery have resulted in two judgments finding IV Waste in contempt of discovery orders. The first judgment, dated April 1, 2021, ordered certain discovery measures taken at IV Waste's expense. A copy is attached. The second judgment was signed on December 20, 2022 (a copy is attached hereto) and orders certain penalties in the ongoing litigation and an award of attorney's fees. IV Waste has taken a suspensive appeal of the judgment, which is currently pending in the Louisiana Fourth Circuit Court of Appeal. IV Waste vigorously denies it did not comply with the relevant court orders.

August 4, 2023

At this time, the Orleans Lawsuit remains pending, and no other final or appealable judgments have been issued. A trial is set on May 13, 2024. IV Waste does not deem the Orleans Lawsuit or the attached judgments material to its ability to perform the work and services that are the subject of the Request for Proposals and this Proposal Submission.

Jefferson:

On February 10, 2023, IV Waste filed a civil action against the City of Kenner in the 24th Judicial District Court for the Parish of Jefferson seeking a declaratory judgment regarding the City's purported suspension of certain of IV Waste's services under its contract with Kenner, captioned: IV Waste, L.L.C. v. City of Kenner, No. 837-635, Division "N" (the "Jefferson Lawsuit"). The City of Kenner countersued, claiming IV Waste has breached certain of the contract's provisions and seeking damages. IV Waste amended its petition to add claims for damages from the City's breaches of contract. The parties' competing claims mostly involve legal issues of contract interpretation and the City of Kenner's right to suspend any of IV Waste's services during the term of the contract, and IV Waste strongly denies all allegations that it breached the contract in any way. The parties are engaged in discovery in the case, and no trial date is set. IV Waste does not deem the Jefferson Lawsuit as material to its ability to perform the work and services that are the subject of the Request for Proposals and this Proposal Submission.

If any additional information is requested regarding these matters, I can be contacted at (504) 523-1580.

Regards,

Jennifer Thornton

Upstart SDT Tries To Make a Splash In the Trash Business

New Orleans Firm Uses
Experimental Methods
And Sleek, Clean Trucks

February 20, 2007; Page B9

In New Orleans's French Quarter, it seemed nothing could ever stanch the morning-after party scent permeating from its famed Bourbon Street -- especially during Mardi Gras.

"There's a whole bunch of beer spilled and liquor and whatever else, and when the sun comes up...it all ferments," says Leonce Collins, a 10-year French Quarter resident and local tour guide. "When I've taken tourists out, I was almost ashamed."

TRASH TALK

- What's New: Small player SDT is trying make a mark in the stodgy business of trash collection as it helps New Orleans's French Quarter clean up its image.
- The Approach: A cadre of neatly dressed workers and spotless, sleek trucks patrol streets, especially during the Mardi Gras revelry.
- What's Next: The company has launched a glitzy TV-ad campaign to expand its services to other parts of Louisiana as well as out of state.

But this year, Mr. Collins and others hope, things may be different when Carnival revelry officially ceases at midnight.

Since January, responsibility for trash collection and street cleaning in the French Quarter has been in the hands of Sidney Torres IV, a local real-estate entrepreneur. In a few short months, 31-year-old Mr. Torres and his new company, SDT Waste & Debris Services LLC, under new guidelines from the city, have attempted to clean up the image of waste removal in the historic neighborhood.

With its sleek, polished trucks, glitzy marketing and experimental cleaning methods, SDT illustrates how small outsiders can come into stodgy industries and get noticed by shaking up protocol.

New Tactics

Instead of just flushing streets with water, Mr. Torres is testing new scents such as lemon or eucalyptus to reduce the squalid odor. The company's giant flusher and sweeper trucks are painted in an unusual black-and-white style. And there's a cadre of lime-green sidewalk and gutter sweepers that resemble snow mobiles. All trucks are scrubbed by hand each night so they hit the streets the next day spotless. And Mr. Torres has started outfitting them with global-positioning systems for better scheduling. He says he also is building a $3 million facility to house a mechanic shop as well as a $300,000 automated car wash.

SDT workers wear trendy black Dickies pants, steel-toed boots and customized shirts with the company's bull logo -- which Mr. Torres designed to pay homage to his family's bullfighter heritage.

His company's clean look seems to be extending to the city as well. "This is the cleanest I've ever seen the Quarter," says Mr. Collins, the tour guide.

Remney Photography

One of the new, sleek SDT trucks being used to clean up New Orleans' French Quarter

What Mr. Torres and SDT are doing is a "totally different approach," says Mark Wilson, president of the French Quarter Business Association.

With an eye on expanding his waste-removal services to New Orleans businesses and residences not serviced under city contracts, as well as other parts of the state, Mr. Torres also is running a series of glitzy local-TV ads more reminiscent of beer marketing than garbage. The ads feature local musicians and pithy slogans such as, "You can't beat the bull."

Mr. Torres' efforts stem, in part, from a new resolve among New Orleans officials to change the way their most visible neighborhood is perceived. "When we came back from Katrina, we looked at things differently," says Mr. Wilson. "We can't market this city or bring back tourism without the Quarter being clean."

Veronica White, New Orleans sanitation director, with Sidney Torres IV whose small waste company now cleans the French Quarter.

The city's longstanding contract with trash giant Waste Management Inc. expired last year, and the company didn't bid again. "We felt that we preferred not to do it because we couldn't meet the bid specifications and didn't feel comfortable going forward," says Wes Muir, a spokesman for Waste Management.

Veronica White, director of the New Orleans sanitation department, says that when she thought about the specifics for the new contract, "I thought about Disney World and how you always see someone with a broom and dust pan in the street sweeping."

Per the city's request, there is now a cadre of human street sweepers on duty even when trucks aren't rolling. In total, SDT puts in 16 hours a day cleaning the Quarter, five days a week of pressure washing and has twice-daily trash pickup.

Today, Fat Tuesday, is D-Day for both Ms. White and SDT. In addition to his usual staff, Mr. Torres has hired 50 additional employees to help clean the most populated areas. Since Friday, SDT has been on call 24 hours a day, operating from a mobile command center set up inside a tour bus near one of the main parade routes. After Saturday's partying, they started cleaning the French Quarter at 3:30 a.m. and finished at 10:15 a.m. "There was mounds and mounds of garbage," says Mr. Torres, who drove one of the trucks.

Talking Up Trash

Mr. Torres stumbled into the trash-collection trade as a result of the August 2005 storm.

A former self-described "gopher" to musician Lenny Kravitz, and the son of a prominent New Orleans attorney, Mr. Torres had been developing real estate in his hometown prior to the hurricane. After Katrina hit, he had 150 empty hotel rooms in the French Quarter, a location virtually untouched by the flood waters.

So he purchased $1 million worth of generators, water equipment and mobile-home trailers and then began setting up camps in those hotel rooms and the trailers under government contracts for the U.S. Marshals, the U.S. Secret Service and officials from the Federal Emergency Management Agency, or FEMA.

Romney Photography

U.S. Secret Service and officials from the Federal Emergency Management Agency, or FEMA.

At first, Mr. Torres tried hiring someone to remove waste from the camps, but says "they wanted to charge me crazy prices." So he purchased his first waste truck and two dumpsters, putting his name and number on them. Soon after, residents and local businesses desperate for trash removal called -- and SDT Waste & Debris was born. He subsequently bid on, and won, a contract to clean the French Quarter and downtown district as well as a separate contract for the nearby St. Bernard Parish.

Mr. Torres sees his waste work in the French Quarter as a high-profile stepping stone to other parts of Louisiana and the country, such as Atlanta.

Since December, he has spent about $60,000 to $70,000 in TV advertising to try to woo more lucrative commercial accounts and other municipalities. To date, he has about 4,000 commercial accounts in New Orleans and surrounding parishes and expects revenue of $25 million to $30 million in 2007.

He also has hired local musicians to give testimonials for his ads, including jazz trombonist Troy Andrews, a.k.a. Trombone Shorty. "I live in the French Quarter," Mr. Andrews says, "and when I wake up from taking a nap and all hours of the day you see these people cleaning up, and it's a beautiful thing."

It's Time to Get Creative

December 18, 2007

By Teri Evans

WHEN MORNINGS BREAK in New Orleans, a fleet of polished black trucks with tinted windows and shiny chrome wheels roar down city streets. Inside are workers in crisp black uniforms, ready to spill into the French Quarter and start their shift.

It's a day in the life of garbage men. Not just any garbage men. These sharply dressed employees work for Sidney Torres, an entrepreneur who took an unusually stylish approach when he launched SDT Waste & Debris Services in 2005.

Others in the trash business might stick to gritty. But Torres went glam, not only dressing up his trucks and sweepers but also producing glitzy television commercials that include the jazzy, celebratory culture of the Big Easy. "Whether you're the garbage man or a rock star, it's about standing out from the rest," says Torres, who credits the fashionable touch with driving revenues at SDT to an estimated $25 million this year.

A creative strategy can often give entrepreneurs an edge over the competition. Whether it's thinking in opposites, like Torres did, or challenging assumptions, an innovative approach can land deals and hook customers.

"Creativity doesn't cost anything, but it can reap huge rewards," says Joel Saltzman, a San Diego consultant and author of "Shake That Brain!," a book about creative business practices.

In an age of cost-cutting and streamlining, experts say creative thinking re-energizes business owners who may have unwittingly buried their inspiration under tightening budgets.

"The reason we are entrepreneurs is we challenge the way things have been done," says Charles "Chic" Thompson, a Keswick, Va., motivational speaker and author of "What a Great Idea!," a guide to thinking creatively. "But after several years in business you can forget what it's like to be an entrepreneur."

Not Mary Cantando, a Raleigh, N.C., consultant to women business owners. More than five years after launching her consulting firm, she still remembers to "get outside of my head" to come up with creative ideas.

One morning several years ago, Cantando was struggling with a business problem just as her yellow lab, Sonar, nudged her for attention. During their leisurely walk, Cantando found herself talking out loud, asking Sonar for his opinion and then imagining what the canine's rather simplified perspective might be. As a result, she discovered new possibilities and ultimately solved the problem. Conversations with Sonar are now a daily morning ritual. For more perplexing issues, she transports herself into the mindset of a trusted friend, who she views as a sage.

"Instead of a knee-jerk reaction, I stop and think, 'What would Sheila do in this situation?' It's as if she were my mentor, but with no requirement on her part," says Cantando, who is also the author of the business guide, "The Woman's Advantage."

Creativity experts say entrepreneurs can discover their competitive advantage also by questioning assumptions. Saltzman suggests creating a list of everything you know to be true about your business — the more obvious the better — then go back and challenge each one.

Another powerful strategy, Saltzman says, is to examine your negatives and see if you can turn them into positives. It worked for Cantando. Whenever she makes a negative announcement in a meeting, she always follows up with three positive results.

For instance, "if you lose your biggest account, you may say, 'Well, they were slow paying anyway, the guy was tough to deal with, and it frees up time to assign people to a different client or search for a new client,'" Cantando says. That's a challenge for many entrepreneurs, because "we often think that our way is the best or only way," she says.

Although small-business owners are indeed experts in their field, that may actually hinder creative solutions since they know too much, according to Thompson. He encourages entrepreneurs to search outside the confines of their industry for new approaches in business.

"Find atypical analogies that redefine what's possible for your industry, not someone that does the exact same thing you do," Thompson says. "You can ask how would Apple or Starbucks solve your challenge?"

Dan Calista of Vynamic Solutions followed Thompson's advice and found his "atypical analogy" in a business that's truly unlike his boutique management-consulting firm. Now, the Philadelphia entrepreneur heads to Cereality, a unique cafe where pajama-clad employees serve up cereals and toppings, to get his inspiration.

"When individuals join our team, I take them to Cereality as part of their orientation to discuss what a customer experience is all about," says Calista.

What does a cereal cafe have in common with a serious management-consulting firm?

"Cereality took a product that's been around for a long time and created a fun Saturday morning experience around it," Calista says. "We've also taken a service that's been around for a long time and emphasized the customer experience in how we work."

It appears to be working. In August, prior to incorporating Thompson's strategies, Vynamic projected a 21% increase in 2007 revenues. The company has since revised its projection and now expects revenues to rise 36% this year. Calista attributes the additional growth in large part to the company's new emphasis on creative thinking.

Are you a creative entrepreneur?

Consider these questions and judge for yourself. If you answer yes to any of them, read on for expert strategies to create new ideas or solutions.

1. Do you dismiss ideas for being "out of scope"?

If yes, then... be curious first, critical second. Allow people at least one minute to explore their idea. "The easiest thing to say is 'No, that wouldn't work,' and that quashes the creative process," says Saltzman, author of "Shake That Brain!" Instead, say "Yes, and," then build on their idea.

2. Do you only consider what you should do, yet still draw a blank?

If yes, then... create a list of "nevers." What would you never do? What would someone new to your industry do? "Then consider what's right about the 'nevers' and see if that sparks an idea," says Thompson, author of "What a Great Idea!"

3. Do you follow rigid guidelines for what's right and wrong?

If yes, then... throw out the grammar-school rules. The teacher (or boss) isn't always right and there's often more than one right answer. "The goal is to always look for second, third and fourth right answers," Thompson says.

4. Do you find yourself or others saying, "That's not the way we do things"?

If yes, then... make a list of what people say that stifles ideas — and post them in a highly visible place in your company. "You can be as outrageous as to fine people 50 cents or $5 every time they say a killer phrase," Thompson says.

5. Do you talk about creativity, but never take time to explore it?

If yes, then... commit to change — and mean it. "People say, 'My door is always open,' but then it isn't," Saltzman says. "Adopt a sense of fun. It doesn't have to be 24/7, but when people are having fun they're more likely to generate new ideas."

Mardi Gras: A reason to celebrate

NEW ORLEANS | As Mardi Gras approaches, the Crescent City has plenty of progress to rejoice in as it continues to move forward

January 27, 2008

BY NICOLE ALPER

NEW ORLEANS -- This Louisiana city's biggest celebration has undergone countless transformations over the years, but none as dramatic as the one that threatened to cancel the event just as it was celebrating its 150th anniversary.

In 2006 Hurricane Katrina struck. But Mardi Gras marched on, a symbol of that indefatigable New Orleans spirit.

This year, Mardi Gras day comes early, on Feb. 5.

To note the city's path toward recovery, you need only look as far as the French Quarter streets -- clean streets, thanks to Sidney Torres IV, a boutique hotelier who, at 31, founded the chronically hip garbage collection company SDT (for Sidney Denecio Torres).

With drunken revelers cheering him on last year, SDT not only met its goal of getting the post-party city squeaky clean in record time, Torres' methods -- spraying the streets with lemon-scented disinfectant, clothing his staff in chic garb, purchasing stylish trucks with gleaming chrome wheels -- became synonymous with the French Quarter's newfound pristine condition.

"Last year, local news stations poured in practically daring me to fail," Torres said.

This year, he was rewarded for his efforts by being asked to serve as Grand Marshal of the most anticipated Mardi Gras parade, Orpheus, down the streets of the city he's helping to rebuild.

Reshaping the city

Torres' float is being created at Mardi Gras World, a massive workshop/museum across the river from New Orleans in the riverfront community of Algiers, a requisite outing for anyone wanting an up-close view of these Brobdingnagian creations.

Owned by energetic 81-year-old Blaine Kern, aka Mr. Mardi Gras, the facility is getting a new home on the New Orleans side of the river. It's part of a massive redevelopment project Kern is spearheading on both sides of the Mississippi.

"After Katrina we were so afraid of what would happen to our business," said Kern's son, Barry. "But we soon realized that the people who love Mardi Gras the most -- the locals, the families -- are the last people to give it up. When we're out of business, you can turn the lights out on New Orleans."

Torres riding a float during Mardi Gras is an example of something even more significant: the emergence of a youthful entrepreneurial spirit, not unlike that which came out of Buenos Aires' Palermo District following that country's devastating economic collapse. These are the people quietly reshaping New Orleans.

'Even more determined'

As I recently strolled down a once again thriving Magazine Street, a three-mile long stretch of cafes, restaurants and shops, I stumbled upon Suzanne Perron's eponymous bridal shop.

Perron spent years in Manhattan as a designer for Vera Wang, dressing the likes of Holly Hunter (for the Oscars) and Jennifer Lopez (for her wedding to singer Marc Anthony).

She came back to her hometown just weeks after Katrina.

New Orleans's Sidney Torres IV is an artist when it comes to making garbage disappear. By Nicole Alper

BUZZING AROUND the French Quarter in his tricked-out Polaris Ranger, Sidney Torres IV — his film-star good looks as notable as his familial Roman numeral — is chasing garbage trucks. “There it is!” he shouts, throwing pedal to the metal. “That’s one of ours!”

As we approach the back of the vehicle, its chrome wheels catch the sunlight and its pristine black exterior gleams like a freshly polished grand piano. The signature bull logo (Torres’s ancestors, he tells me, were bullfighters) along with the initials SDT, for Sidney Donecio Torres, can be spied from several key angles. It’s unlike any garbage truck I’ve ever seen. Then again, Torres is no ordinary waste-management CEO.

Just back from vacation in the Bahamas (something he rarely takes), his skin glowing behind black Armani sunglasses, Torres is doing for garbage what CNBC’s “Money Honey,” Maria Bartiromo, did for Wall Street: making humdrum work — and in Torres’s case downright dirty work — sexy.

When I cease being distracted by this improbable scenario, I begin to notice what Torres has brought me out here, at six a.m., to see: absolutely nothing. Not a cup. Not a piece of paper. No indication that we are in the heart of the postweekend French Quarter in a city that still suffers in reputation — often unfairly — for being filthy and unsafe.

Torres’s metamorphosis into Mr. Clean emerged out of equal parts necessity and entrepreneurial spirit. A real estate hotshot and the owner of three hotels when Hurricane Katrina hit in August 2005, Torres was facing a growing mountain of garbage in the aftermath of the disaster. When he researched much-needed waste pickup for his hotels in the absence of government service, he found “the prices were insane," he says. So, he bought his own truck. Upon discovering that people were desperate for efficient, affordable garbage collection, he soon purchased another truck. Then he submitted the winning bid to collect garbage in New Orleans's neighboring St. Bernard Parish. Before he knew it, his S/D Waste and Debris Services had secured an annual $9 million, 10-year city contract for the French Quarter and beyond.

Torres's unabashed enthusiasm surely plays a role in his success. "I love the garbage business," he blurts out merrily. "We're adding class to trash!" Torres's newfound passion is even more incongruous given his youth (32) and his résumé: In his late teens, he led a rock-and-roll lifestyle as personal assistant to music legend Lenny Kravitz.

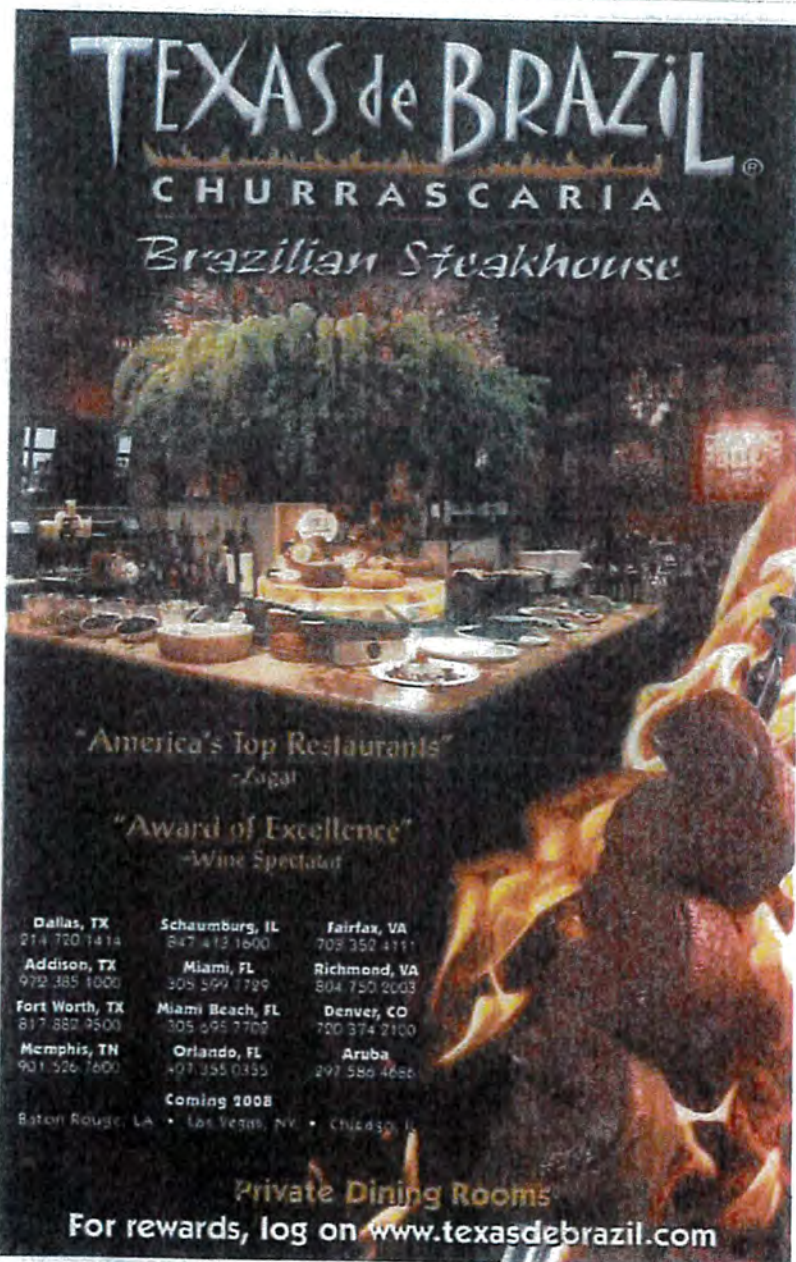

"For Kravitz it was a business," explains Torres. "but for me it was a nonstop party. I hit rock bottom and knew I had to stop." So Torres went straight, turning his attention away from drugs and toward mentoring at-risk youth and purchasing real estate.

I FIRST MET TORRES in 2000, when he was just opening a second boutique hotel, Hotel Royal, an 1827 Creole town house in the French Quarter. I was staying at his other property, Melrose Mansion, an impeccably restored Victorian manor where a six-foot-tall, tuxedo-and-ball-gown-wearing papier-mâché couple greet you at the entrance and a life-size wooden farmer lurks in the hallway. I was immediately struck by Torres's style — elegant with unexpected flashes of whimsy. Torres was one of several young businesspeople accenting a city reputed for its traditional jazz roots and old-world charm with a more youthful, hip vibe.

Post-Katrina, Torres is among a group of young residents committed to a new vision for their city — only today the challenge is to reinvent New Orleans's image rather than bolster it. Nicolas Perkins, a 36-year-old Tulane University graduate and serial entrepreneur who brokered a deal selling his last employer to Microsoft for somewhere in the hundreds of millions, chose to base his revolutionary new online trading company, the Receivables Exchange, in New Orleans. And real estate mogul and hotelier Sean Cummings (owner of the International House and Loft 523) is overseeing a massive new waterfront project aimed at reconnecting the iconic Mississippi River to New Orleans and its residents.

Linked by a dedicated vision, these businessmen are also perfectionists. Torres runs his company with the precision of a German-Swiss watch and virtual omniscience, thanks to a $500,000 custom surveillance system that lets him track just about every discarded to-go cup and beaded necklace in the Quarter. "At first my staff was wary of the system," admits Torres, "like they were being watched. But I explained that it wasn't about spying on them — it was about doing the best job possible."

Maintaining a crew of supervisors to oversee the street sweepers, garbage collectors, pressure washers, and hand crew, Torres likens his methods to doing battle. "If you listen to the radio, everybody is in communication. The supervisors are constantly talking and know where everyone is. It's like fighting a war — positions are known at all times." So much so that SDT's new corporate headquarters in St. Bernard Parish houses a war room armed with 20 flat-screen monitors displaying everything from the GPS surveillance system to weather and traffic channels. The command center is even capped off with a rooftop helipad. "It looks like you can launch a space shuttle from there," laughs Torres.

A decidedly atypical garbage kingpin, Torres is also far from the typical boss. Listening to him do shout-outs to his workers, who don stylish uniforms — black pants, SDT-logo tops, and an SDT hat (Torres insists that his garbage staff display the same polished look as his hotel staff) — he seems more like a musician connecting with his band members (okay, maybe sound crew) than like a garbage boss surveying his staff. Torres emanates — on the surface, at least — a "we're all in this together" vibe, insisting he will never ask a staff member to perform a task he himself is not willing to do.

"You just don't expect to see a guy who looks like that and is worth all that money being out there on the garbage trucks," says George Segers, co-owner of Tommy's Flowers. "But he is, and he's doing a fantastic job. The French Quarter has never been cleaner — and that includes pre-Katrina!" It's a sentiment shared by most French Quarter residents and shop owners, as well as by the city itself, which made Torres grand marshal of a Mardi Gras parade honoring SDT and others for their behind-the-scenes work for the city.

Though he collects the kudos, Torres knows good people are essential to his success. Every month, he runs an ad in the local paper to highlight the employee of the month — an honor that comes with a $500 bonus. His staff earn more than they would at any other waste-management company in the state. And virtually every employee is local. "They approach their jobs," says Torres, "as an investment in the city's rebirth." To that end, Torres is now recycling at his transfer station and is in the process of testing a biodiesel truck. If it's a success, the entire fleet will go green.

Another key to Torres's success is that he exceeds expectations. "The industry standard is to do the bare minimum," he says. "If a company empties a trash can and drops a bottle in the process, odds are they'll leave it behind. With us, we go the extra mile. In some areas we even power-wash the trash cans and spray them with a fragrant disinfectant. It's not in the contract, but it makes a difference and people appreciate it. Do something because it's the right thing to do, and it will come back to you tenfold."

Torres's mantra appears to be working. He's expanding his company within Louisiana and plans to go national in five years. When he's asked how he could ensure the same meticulousness if he were to expand the company to that extent, he simply says, "That's why they invented helicopters." EW

The Smell of Success in the Quarter May Change

An SDT Waste and Debris Services truck cleaned a French Quarter street on Friday in New Orleans. The mayor, citing budget woes, wants to cut the service.

Lee Celano for The New York Times

By Adam Nossiter

Jan. 30, 2009

NEW ORLEANS — The smell of the French Quarter has long been a combination of the historical and the unspeakable, a toxic and unwelcome reminder of last night's visitors.

That immemorial stench has been mostly a bad memory for the last two years, though, thanks to Sidney D. Torres IV, a stylish garbageman whose vigorous sweeping and spraying broke the unloved tradition, astonishing citizens here. The Quarter was clean, flushed with a patented compound; Mr. Torres, 33, was a local hero, hounded for autographs.

But now another unhappy tradition — New Orleans politics — is poised to undo his efforts, and on the eve of Mardi Gras. The stink that was an undignified counterpoint to the old townhouses threatens a return, just as Carnival's all-out assault begins.

Mayor C. Ray Nagin, feuding with the City Council and claiming budget woes, says he wants to cut the street flushing, mechanical brushing and constant litter patrols that have made the Quarter nearly unrecognizable, but in a good way, to longtime residents and visitors.

The mayor's threat has touched a nerve in a place where so much, coming from City Hall, seems to have gone so wrong since Hurricane Katrina. Here was a welcome exception, and it could be ending. Residents and bartenders from one end of the Quarter to the other are decrying it, and the newly combative Council has threatened to take Mr. Nagin to court to block his efforts.

Why step on the city's principal income source, his critics say, a place that receives nearly seven million visitors a year and indirectly contributes about 30 percent of its operating budget, all for a relatively modest savings of $2.5 million in a budget of nearly $500 million? As of late Friday there was little budging, though the Council president, Jackie Clarkson, said she thought a compromise would eventually be reached.

If not, the soapy suds shooting down Bourbon Street from Mr. Torres's custom-built flusher truck could soon be replaced by more unwholesome ones. "This is crazy, man — as of midnight tomorrow it will be a big mess," said Mr. Torres, general of the Quarter's omnipresent black-clad army of cleaners, known officially as SDT Waste and Debris Services. "Your vomit's very common on Bourbon Street," said Mr. Torres, speaking as one who knows.

He looked down a newly scrubbed section of Toulouse Street, its granite edging gleaming. "In the morning it's full," he said, employing colorful terms for bodily wastes.

The Quarter denizens know this, and they are angry at the mayor, grateful to Mr. Torres. "Thank you, Mr. Torres," a man shouts from a passing pickup truck.

"We think it's a bad decision, and the timing's really bad too," said Marita Jaeger, a bartender at Johnny White's. The scrubbing "has done a lot for the Quarter," she said. "The smell was horrible. I think the mayor's not thinking things through. He's out of touch."

Others used more descriptive language, and several said the newly clean Quarter had been important in reviving the tourism economy here. "People have started to come back in," said Earl Bernhardt, a nightclub and restaurant owner. "They quit coming because it was dirty and it smelled bad. The Quarter smelled like somebody threw up, like a Jolly Green Giant threw up on Bourbon Street. With this sanitizing and deodorizing, we don't have that anymore."

A spokeswoman for Mr. Nagin affirmed that he, too, was seeking a compromise.

"Mayor Nagin is the person who created this, so this is a very difficult decision," said Ceeon Quiett, the spokeswoman, referring to his earlier advocacy of the cleaning regimen. "There are cuts all over our city, as well as in our state," she added, pointing out that the mayor and the Council are trying to find another revenue source.

She said the Quarter would continue to be cleaned in other ways, whatever the outcome of the dispute.

A background of constant feuding between mayor and Council preceded Mr. Nagin's decision. He was angry when the Council rejected his proposal for a property tax increase in December; before that, Mr. Nagin, who is black, accused a white councilwoman of using racially charged language when she questioned other garbage contracts in the city, though a tape of the episode failed to bear out the accusations. Indeed, relations between the mayor and Council have been particularly tense since the body became mostly white, for the first time in years, after Hurricane Katrina.

Mr. Torres's scrub-trucks, with their giant bottom-brushes reaching deep into the gutters of the Quarter's hard-pressed streets, are considered irreplaceable by those whose lives have improved since their arrival.

"It's ridiculous," said Benji Palus, manager and bartender at the Three Legged Dog on Burgundy Street. "He gave us one thing that we clapped him on the back for, and now he's taking it away from us."

The Quarter, he said, had shown great improvement, now threatened. "It even seems like there's fewer rats," said Mr. Palus, adding, "You smell the food, and not the garbage."

Katrina, Mardi Gras, Super Bowl made him trash king

By Rick Jervis, USA TODAY

By Bill Haber, AP

The Iris parade winds its way through a large crowd during its march through the streets of New Orleans Saturday, Feb. 13, 2010. This is the last full weekend of parades before Tuesday's all day celebration of Mardi Gras.

NEW ORLEANS — It's part of Mardi Gras: Bourbon Street will be lined with knee-high, dank-smelling mounds of cups, beads, trash bags, beer bottles, paper plates and pizza crusts. By the next morning, the mess is largely gone, the smell vaporized by a patented perfume.

The person responsible for the disappearing act is Sidney Torres IV, whose company, SDT Waste and Debris Services, holds one of the biggest tasks of Carnival season: picking up what's left of the party.

Mardi Gras is normally the company's toughest challenge. This year, however, the job is even greater, because Mardi Gras arrives just after the New Orleans Saints' first-ever Super Bowl victory, Torres, 34, says. A bigger party with more visitors undoubtedly will bring more trash, he says.

Usually, from Friday to Fat Tuesday — which is this Tuesday — SDT workers pick up 8,000 tons of trash in the French Quarter, Torres says. That's enough to fill three Olympic-size swimming pools.

"Mardi Gras is the Super Bowl of trash," he says. "This is going to be huge."

In a city that relies on its image for revenue, reliable trash pickup is as vital as good jambalaya and jazz bands, says Eric Reitman, chairman of the French Quarter Business Association.

"It's absolutely imperative," Reitman says. "If the (French Quarter) is completely dirty and nasty, people are not going to want to come back. It doesn't work well with the image of the city."

Torres, who once toured with musician Lenny Kravitz as his personal assistant, is also trying to bring glamour to garbage. On Thursday, the cable television channel TLC premiered Trashmen, a reality show based on Torres and his crew tackling the city's cleanup challenges. He has already acquired a rock-star status to those whose businesses rely on prompt pickups.

"I enjoy what I do and I love my city," Torres says. "It feels even better when people appreciate it."

Torres grew up in nearby St. Bernard Parish, son of descendants of the Canary Islands, off the coast of Spain, who populated the area in the 18th century. The bull's head emblazoned on the side of his cleaning trucks is a nod to his heritage's bull-fighting tradition, he says.

He worked for 2½ years for Kravitz while in his 20s but left the tour life after becoming entangled in drugs, he says. He then borrowed money from family members and began restoring French Quarter mansions, opening them as boutique hotels, and soon became a successful developer.

When Hurricane Katrina hit in 2005, nearly drowning New Orleans, garbage companies fled the ruined city, he says.

The French Quarter and his hotels were left without service. The trash companies that stayed were overcharging residents, Torres says.

"I thought, 'I could do this better and at a better cost,'" he says.

He bought a dumpster, then a truck, then another truck. He charged residents pre-Katrina prices. Before he knew it, he was clearing garbage and flood debris for businesses across the French Quarter, he says.

Around the same time, Torres put an ad in the paper for a driver. Jason McDaniel, an out-of-work delivery truck driver, thanks to Katrina, answered.

"I don't think anyone envisioned it would become what it is today," says McDaniel, today the company's vice president of operations. "Except for maybe Sidney."

Today the company owns 150 trucks, services 1,700 households and businesses in 15 parishes and generates about $3.5 million a month in revenue, Torres says.

Shortly after Katrina, one of the first major challenges the company faced was combating that ill-famed "Bourbon Street smell," a vile mixture of stale booze and human excretions, Torres says.

Commercial fragrances didn't cut it. Eucalyptus wasn't strong enough, and strawberry made the street smell like a daiquiri, he says.

Torres flew in a chemist who concocted a lemon-based fragrance with extra enzymes to cut through the smell. He named it "Superfresh" and patented it. To the delight of local bar owners, it neutralized the Bourbon Street funk when sprayed from water trucks.

Joseph Licciardi, who owns two Bourbon Street bars, the Maison Bourbon Jazz Club and Lafitte's Blacksmith Shop piano bar, says the French Quarter has never smelled and looked cleaner.

"They keep it as clean as Disney World," Licciardi says. "It's helped out business tremendously."

Cherie Boos, owner of My Bar on Bourbon Street, said the post-party smell of the street was so wretched it would drive customers away. Today, clients compliment the scent. "It's been incredible to watch," she says.

Sometimes SDT workers pick up more than garbage. Cellphones, wallets, watches, underwear — even a live water moccasin — have been scooped up by his workers, Torres says. Once, the company helped police locate a murder weapon in the garbage.

Mardi Gras will either boost his reputation — or foul it, he says.

"When the national spotlight comes on Bourbon Street, I wanted it spotless," Torres says. "No lunch breaks. I'm going to clean everything."
